Gurgulwinker

There are many nocturnal creatures that dwell inside a forest's interiors but there is one by far superior, it is the Gurgulwinker

The dark makes him ever so happy the day gives him periodic frights when he was a child he would never say
"Could you turn on the lights?"

A Gurgulwinker has two superpower eyes
they let him see anything of any shape or size

In that pitch black hour of night in which any human alone would certainly have to fight to even tell apart

The most unrelated things:
an amputated elephant
from a silver bell that rings!

His favorite activity's clear:
it's jousting a tree with a small plastic spear and hearing it ring with his unclogged-up ear!

A Gurgulwinker's looks are precisely these:
he's fat from his huge appetite for cheese,
he has one large spike on each of his knees,
his fur is bright yellow and never gets fleas,
and he has two small wings like those of bees.

A Gurgulwinker sleeps in an underground burrow,
his bed is a huge heap of hay.
If you really close your eyes and imagine it might be a nice place to lay.

A Gurgulwinker has a few special furry friends, they do so much together they even made up a couple new trends one of which is:
a hat you wear on your head striped orange and yellow and red.
If nobody else wears it who cares?!
Not the Gurgulwinker, or the Bears!!

Anyhow that's enough for now... but just one more thing:

If a Gurgulwinker comes into your room when it's really bright
what do you do?
Yes, that's right!
Be sure to turn off the light!!
